

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

We keep the tryst!
Here, where we knew of old,
The blossomed fragrance, and the new
moon's mild smile,
From out the loneliness of the thicket
The quick, sharp call of some belated bird,
Here, where we leaned together, you
and I,
Here, where I heard the wished-for soft reply,
While through the darkness gleamed the
unworn ring,
Slipped to your hand with tender whispering,
Since that far night what stretch of
smiles, of tears,
Yet Love, across the hollow of the years,
We keep the tryst!
—C. A. Dodson, in "Madame," for February.

Discriminating Review.

Friends of Mrs. Charles Bosher will be glad to know that new editions of her two books "When Love is Love" and "Bobby," are soon to be brought out. Both books have had a large and gratifying sale, and it is rumored that they will be published by the Boston Transcript, is considered by the author and her friends to be especially just and discriminating.

This story deals in an unusually interesting way, with the friendships and love affairs of four women, who, united by the common necessity of earning a living, grow to love and understand each other as only those who can cherish the same high ideals of life and who with mutual tastes and sympathies endeavor to express these ideals in their daily rounds of work and pleasure. Into the lives of each of these women, living thus together as one family, come men whose pleasant friendships inevitably ripen into love, and threaten to disrupt the sisterhood. In this point lies the difference between "When Love is Love" and most of the modern love fiction. Here the interest of the story does not lie in external development, in sudden turns of plot, in surprises sprung by the author on his reader, in any objective suspense, but rather in the portrayal of a pure and great love as it really comes to man, naturally, inevitably, overwhelmingly, flooding life with happiness and peace. And the love portrayed here is not the love of physical passion, of the lower appetites which degrade so many of the novels of society, but the love of women who come across personalities that are full and deep and rich with untold emotions, so in literature you find here and there a style which glows with this fullness of life and feeling, whose beauties are drawn from an inexhaustible mine of vitalized material, deep as has been the life of its author. Here is such a style, and above all enjoyment of plot and narrative, you are stirred to the depths of your nature by the human values of this story by the wealth of the emotional experience.

Coal and Iron Supply.
Pennsylvania, which makes more than half the iron used in the United States, produces less than 2 per cent. of the iron ore mined in the country.

Pennsylvania is an iron maker, mines less than 6 per cent. of the total. In fact, the coal is the only thing that it has in abundance.

There is also a well-authenticated case of a man was as sane as you or I.

One day while quietly carrying the meat of a dinner to his home he had invited several guests, a gentlemanly couple, who had been invited to the house.

When the lady spoke the fatal words, when, without a warning, he sprang at him across the table, using the carving-knife with all the fury of the most violent man.

And yet under all other conditions, he was perfectly rational.

"If, on the other hand," said Maitland, continuing his remarks as if unaware of what he was saying, "if you had had any foundation in fact, it is almost certain they must have been directed against some specific person or persons."

Whether or not he was sane or not, stay—how do we know that he did not? Let us proceed without examination of the papers, and he began perusing the insurance policies.

Neither Gwyn nor I spoke till he had finished and thrown them down, when we both turned expectantly toward him.

"Principal to be held in trust by Miss Darrow. Now for this," and he passed we have yet to find out what the insurance policies, and the income kept in ignorance of the trust, to go to Miss Darrow. Now for this," and he passed

Gwyn the sealed envelope addressed to her.

She broke the seal with much agitation. "Shall I read it aloud?" she asked.

We signified our desire to hear it, and she read as follows:

My forebodings have seemed to you strange and uncalled for, but when this comes to you, and you will know whether or not they were groundless.

Of one episode in my career which shook the structure of my being to its foundation, you have been carefully kept in ignorance. It is necessary that you should know it when I am gone, and I have accordingly committed it to this paper, which will then fall into your hands.

My early life, until two years after I married my mother, was spent in India, the adult portion thereof being devoted to the service of the East India Company. I had charge of a department in their depot at Bombay. You have seen Naples. Add to the beauties of that city the interesting and motley population of Calcutta and you can form some idea of the attractions of Bombay. I was very happy there until the occurrence of the event I am about to narrate.

One morning, my duties calling me to one of the wharves, my attention was attracted by a young girl dancing upon the flags by the water's edge. This ordinary scene is so common an object in India as to attract but little notice from anyone of refined tastes.

Judging from the cast of her features, her movements, was of a very different type. As my curiosity drew me nearer to her she turned her head toward me, and I caught a glimpse of her face.

Though many years her senior she was still my first love—the one great passion of my life.

She did not attempt to describe her inoffensive loveliness, for like the beauty of a flower, it was incapable of analysis. Nothing that could be written would give one any adequate idea of this girl's charms.

And that it can always be relied upon. The fact that it is pleasant to take, also that it contains no harmful drug, is of much importance when a child is intended for young children. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Smoke, But No Fire.
There was a considerable crowd at the store of Messrs. Miller & Rhoads early yesterday morning, occasioned by volume of smoke arising from the basement. The cause of the smoke was a fire in the basement, but it was discovered that there was no fire. The smoke came from the adjoining store of the Atlanta & Pacific Railway Company, and resulted from an effort there to thaw some frozen pipes by the use of a kerosene torch.
